HERITAGE & TRADITION

For 20 years Fairlie Yachts have been defining the standard for classic yacht restoration, design and construction. Gaining inspiration from the incredible artistry of William Fife III, the firm have attained an in depth knowledge of the acclaimed designer's works and having restored many of his originals, currently hold Fife's design archive and continue to building authentic replicas which are the envy of all true classical boat enthusiasts. Drawing from over two decades of restoration experience, and embracing some of the traditional boat building skills often lost to a modern generation, the team are now adept at bringing us a real taste of perfect styling to which the Fairlie 77 gives testimony.

OUR JOURNEY

Moving forward from the landmark restoration of the 1931 Fife schooner 'Altair' in which their principal staff were critically involved, Fairlie then rebuilt the large 1911 internationally famous racing yacht 'Mariquita'. The result was universally acclaimed as a masterpiece, from the stout backbone to the magical detail for which the yard is now famous. Fifteen major projects have followed, and Fairlie's core workforce of time-served shipwrights now lead a widely skilled crew who relish new challenges and innovative materials.

Fairlie's naval architect, Paul Spooner, is deeply committed to ensuring traditions are upheld when it comes to restorations.

'To be true to the original detail we manufacture everything exactly the way it was,' he says. 'We have a keen eye for maintaining heritage and tradition and a proven experience in the design and building of bespoke yachts.'

While originality is par for the course, Fairlie also employ 21st century products in order to slow down the degradation of traditional materials.

The team currently devote much time specialising in bespoke work, designing yachts to a client's specific requirements. Ensuring longevity and attention to detail is an absolute prerequisite of every project undertaken. Remaining true to the heart of classic tradition, the yachts are designed with long keels which provide the gentlest movement while carving a course through the water and alluring polished woodwork highlights ornate bronze fittings and billowing classic canvas sails all paint a picture of history and endurance.

“WHEN A CLIENT COMES TO FAIRLIE YACHTS THEY ARE LOOKING FOR THE EXQUISITE CRAFTSMANSHIP FOR WHICH WE HAVE BECOME RENOWNED AND WHICH EMBRACES AN AGE OLD MARITIME TRADITION. BLENDING THESE QUALITIES WITH STATE OF THE ART NAVAL ARCHITECTURE, I ENSURE THERE IS ABSOLUTELY NO COMPROMISE WHEN APPEALING TO THE REQUIREMENTS AND DESIRES OF THE MODERN YACHTSMAN. FUSING CONTEMPORARY ELEMENTS OF DESIGN WITH THE TRADITIONAL ASPECTS OF OUR CRAFT WE ENSURE OUR YACHTS ENJOY A TIMELESS ELEGANCE AND REMAIN PERFECTLY TRUE TO THEIR ROOTS.”

CONSTRUCTION

HULL

The hull is constructed on a mahogany laminated backbone and frame structure. A layer of Douglas fir strip planking, two layers of mahogany veneers laid at 45 degrees and one layer fore & aft to give complete resistance to torsion, impact & longitudinal forces.

DECK

Teak swept decks are laid on a layer of marine plywood to create a beautiful flush deck from stem to stern. Varnished covering boards and traditional timber bulwarks finish the decks to perfection.

ACCOMMODATION

The Fairlie 77 offers two interior accommodation layouts.

As standard the large master cabin, with en-suite bathroom and separate wet room, is located forward of the saloon. For those owners who would prefer their 'master' cabin aft, Paul Spooner, has designed a very private cabin which has its own dedicated companionway access and private cockpit. This layout offers excellent privacy and separation from your guests and two crew. Whichever layout is preferred, the Fairlie 77 accommodates 4 cabins:

- 1 x Master cabin (fwd or aft)
- 1 x VIP Guest cabin (double or bunked cabin)
- 1 x Guest cabin (bunk cabin)
- 1 x Twin crew cabin in the forepeak forward
